Permanent Link to Galileo now predicts the weather
2021/07/29

Image: Spire Global, a space-to-cloud analytics company, is now using Galileo to offer GNSS radio occultation (GNSS-RO) products for the weather community. Radio occultation is the process of using satellites to measure how GNSS signals are refracted by the Earth's atmosphere. Two of Spire's nanosatellites are the first to use Galileo signals to measure GNSS-RO profiles, a service now available to Spire's global user base as a new tier of data for advanced weather prediction. The satellites launched on Nov. 29, 2018, from Sriharikota, India. The satellites are part of the collaborative European Space Agency ARTES Pioneer Space-as-a-Service program, which aims to prove the value of using nanosatellites for space-based GNSS-RO. With Galileo, Spire's weather observation satellites can harvest approximately 25 percent of the total GNSS-RO profiles available from the existing GNSS satellite constellations in orbit today. Spire operates 72 nanosatellites — also known as "cubesats" — and more than 30 ground stations throughout the world. The nanosatellites are developed, assembled and tested at Spire's production facility in Glasgow, Scotland.
